

The first aerial photo to be taken of the U. S. War College in Washington. The famous institution is situated at the juncture of the Potomac and Anacostia rivers, about two miles south of the Capitol. James Creek shows on the right and the Washington Channel on the left. To the extreme left may be seen part of Potomac Park. The War College serves primarily as a post graduate school for army officers.

Keystone View

General Pershing, surrounded and captured by a bunch of happy kiddies on the deck of the transport that carried him through the Panama Canal on his recent tour of inspection. One of the youngsters is his namesake, John Pershing Butcher, whose dad is in command of the canal's air forces.

International

P. A. Clark's four-year-old chestnut colt Dunboyne, Teddy Rice up, just after winning, before twenty thousand turf enthusiasts, the Paumonok Handicap, the feature event of the opening of the metropolitan racing season at the Jamaica track a week ago yesterday.

Levick

Convict Eugene V. Debs, serving a ten-year sentence for violation of the espionage law, who has been nominated for the fourth time by the Socialists as their candidate for President. And we'll say that in this new photo, taken at Atlanta, Ga., he looks the part.

Underwood

The first of the new Victory yachts destined in the belief of many yachtsmen to become even more popular in New York waters than the famous "Stars." Twenty-two of these "Victories," designed by William Gardner, designer of the Cup defender Vanitie, are building at Nevins Yards, City Island. They are nineteen foot six on the waterline and carry the speedy Marconi rig. No. 1 Victory, the Ace, is owned by Howard Curry, of Port Washington. Look for some spirited racing when these new one-designers get into action this summer on the Sound and Lower Bay.

Rosenfeld

One of the best photos ever taken of William Dean Howells, distinguished novelist, poet and editor, who died the other day in New York in his 84th year. Mr. Howells, for many years known as the dean of American letters, was the dean of the alumni of the Tribune staff.

Van der Weide